Bancos Centrales optimistas

Los bancos centrales de Estados Unidos y Europa se mostraron optimistas con respecto a la posibilidad de bajar las tasas este año, probablemente durante el verano del hemisferio norte. Los datos laborales de febrero, publicados el viernes, mostraron una significativa corrección hacia abajo en la creación de puestos de trabajo en EE.UU. durante diciembre y enero y un leve aumento en el desempleo. En el caso europeo, hay satisfacción por la baja de la inflación, a pesar de todavía estar lejos del nivel objetivo. Como resultado, las tasas de los bonos del Tesoro a 10 años cayeron a mínimos de un mes, y las acciones americanas alcanzaron máximos históricos.

Los primeros recortes en USA podrían llegar a mitad de año. El presidente de la Fed, Jay Powell, dijo no estar lejos de tener la confianza suficiente para poder comenzar a bajar las tasas este año. Los mercados apuestan a que eso se llevaría a cabo en el mes de junio. Sin embargo, hay dudas con respecto a cuantos cortes habría. El mercado apuesta a casi cuatro cortes de 25bp cada uno, aunque si el primero fuera en junio, el comienzo del proceso electoral americano haría difícil cualquier movimiento entre junio y noviembre sin que de uno u otro lado acusen a la Fed de favorecer a algún candidato. Los datos de inflación a publicarse esta semana podrían fortalecer o debilitar la confianza de la Fed.

Mercado laboral da tenues señales de enfriamiento. El informe laboral mensual publicado el viernes mostró un alto nivel de creación de puestos de trabajo. Los 275 mil nuevos empleos de febrero superaron ampliamente las expectativas 200 mil. Sin embargo, se revisaron a la baja en 167 mil empleos las cifras de diciembre y enero. Además, el desempleo aumentó a 3,9% desde los 3,7% de enero, el nivel más alto en dos años. Por otro lado, los salarios crecieron un 4,3% interanual, menos de lo esperado, pero todavía bien por encima de la inflación.

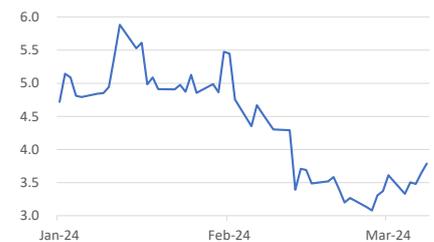

El BCE alineado con la Fed. El Banco Central Europeo (BCE) decidió mantener las tasas de referencia sin cambios por cuarta reunión consecutiva. Sin embargo, en línea con el discurso de la Fed, señaló la posibilidad de un recorte en junio dado el progreso verificado en el descenso de la inflación. En esa línea, la probabilidad de una suba de tasas en junio implícita en el mercado de futuros se disparó al 86%.

Trump y Biden ya se enfrentan como candidatos. Las primarias del Super Tuesday definieron los candidatos presidenciales para noviembre. Trump ganó sin sorpresas, con lo que enfrentará nuevamente a Biden, quien, ya en modo campaña, fue muy crítico de la gestión anterior en su discurso del "Estado de la Unión". Sin embargo, con su popularidad en el punto más bajo de su presidencia, las encuestas favorecen claramente a Trump.
